

INTEGRITY RECORDS

THE OVERCOMERS

*The Goal of Every Believer, and the Promise
Waiting on the Other Side*

“For everyone born of God overcomes the world. This is the victory that has overcome the world, even our faith.”

1 JOHN 5:4

THE OVERCOMERS

The Goal of Every Believer, and the Promise Waiting on the Other Side

© Chris Johnson. All rights reserved.

No part of this publication may be reproduced, distributed, or transmitted in any form or by any means, including photocopying, recording, or other electronic or mechanical methods, without the prior written permission of the publisher, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical reviews and certain other noncommercial uses permitted by copyright law.

Scripture quotations taken from the Holy Bible unless otherwise noted.

Integrity Records — Texas

integrityrecords.org

Table of Contents

Introduction — Born to Overcome	5
Chapter One — More Than Conquerors	7
Chapter Two — The Victory That Overcomes: Faith	10
Chapter Three — To Him Who Overcomes	13
Chapter Four — Blessed Is the One Who Perseveres	17
Chapter Five — Overcoming the Accuser	20
Chapter Six — Thanks Be to God Who Gives the Victory	23
Chapter Seven — Overcoming as an Artist	26
Closing Word	29

INTRODUCTION

Born to Overcome

“For everyone born of God overcomes the world. This is the victory that has overcome the world, even our faith. Who is it that overcomes the world? Only the one who believes that Jesus is the Son of God.”

1 JOHN 5:4-5

John doesn't describe overcoming as a rare achievement reserved for a spiritual elite. He describes it as the ordinary condition of everyone born of God — a birthright, not a merit badge. The goal of the believer, according to this verse, isn't to eventually become an overcomer through enough effort. It's to recognize what has already been true since the moment of new birth, and to live from that reality rather than toward it.

This book exists to make that goal concrete — not a vague spiritual aspiration, but the specific, repeated theme Scripture uses to describe the entire trajectory of a believer's life: overcoming the world, overcoming the accuser, overcoming besetting sin, and finally receiving the specific promises given to those who do. For an artist facing an industry built on entirely different measures of success, this goal is worth naming clearly and returning to often.

You do not become an overcomer by winning enough. You are already one, and the winning flows from that.

CHAPTER ONE

More Than Conquerors

“No, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him who loved us.”

ROMANS 8:37

Paul writes this in the middle of a passage naming trouble, hardship, persecution, famine, danger, and sword — not abstract difficulties, but the actual catalog of what believers in his own churches were facing. He doesn't promise the absence of these things. He promises something stronger than their absence: that in the middle of all of them, believers are more than conquerors.

The phrase is worth sitting with. Not merely conquerors — people who survive and eventually win — but more than conquerors, through a love that was never in question to begin with. The victory Paul describes isn't earned in the trouble. It's already secured through Christ's love, and the trouble simply becomes the arena where that already-secured victory becomes visible.

Through him who loved us

This qualifier matters enormously. The confidence isn't more than conquerors through our own resilience, talent, or effort. It's through him who loved us — the victory is anchored in a love outside the believer's own performance, which means it doesn't fluctuate with how well or poorly that performance is currently going.

More than a conqueror doesn't mean stronger than the trouble. It means secured by a love the trouble was never strong enough to touch.

REFLECTION

What current trouble in your life or career have you been trying to conquer through your own strength alone?

What would change if you approached that trouble already more than a conqueror, rather than still fighting to become one?

CHAPTER TWO

The Victory That Overcomes: Faith

“For everyone born of God overcomes the world. This is the victory that has overcome the world, even our faith.”

1 JOHN 5:4

John identifies the specific mechanism of overcoming, and it's worth noticing how unglamorous it is: not willpower, not spiritual intensity, not achievement — faith. Simple, ordinary trust in what God has already said and already done. This is the victory that has overcome the world — past tense, already accomplished, and available to be exercised rather than built from nothing.

Faith as the overcoming itself, not a technique for it

It's tempting to read this and immediately ask, “what do I do with this faith to produce overcoming?” — treating faith as a tool for achieving a separate result. John's language suggests something more direct: the faith itself is the victory. Trusting what is already true about Christ's finished work is not a step toward overcoming the world. It is the overcoming, already happening, the moment that trust is genuinely present.

For an artist facing daily pressure to measure worth by streams, chart position, or industry approval, this reframes the whole task. The goal isn't to eventually overcome those pressures through enough success to finally feel secure. It's to trust, today, what is already true regardless of this week's numbers — and to recognize that trust itself as the victory John is describing.

Faith isn't the strategy for overcoming the world. According to John, it's the overcoming, already accomplished, the moment it's genuinely present.

REFLECTION

Where are you currently trying to overcome a pressure through achievement, rather than through simply trusting what's already true?

What would it look like today to let faith itself be the victory, rather than a means to a separate one?

CHAPTER THREE

To Him Who Overcomes

The book of Revelation gives seven specific promises to overcomers, one attached to each of the letters to the seven churches. These are not vague encouragements. They are concrete, repeated, and worth knowing individually, because together they paint the fullest picture Scripture offers of what overcoming actually leads to.

The right to eat from the tree of life in the paradise of God	Revelation 2:7
Will not be hurt by the second death	Revelation 2:11
Hidden manna, a white stone, and a new name	Revelation 2:17
Authority over the nations, and the morning star	Revelation 2:26-28
Dressed in white, name never blotted from the book of life	Revelation 3:5
Made a pillar in the temple of God, never to leave it again	Revelation 3:12
The right to sit with Christ on his throne	Revelation 3:21

Each of these seven promises was given to a specific church facing a specific struggle — lost love, persecution, compromise, spiritual deadness, lukewarmness. The promises are not generic. They are matched precisely to what each church needed to hear in order to keep overcoming rather than give up.

Every promise to the overcomer was given to a church in the middle of a real struggle — not to a church that had already finished struggling.

The promises are for now, not only for later

It's easy to read these as purely future rewards, disconnected from present struggle. But each letter addresses believers in the actual middle of their difficulty, which means the promise is meant to change how the present struggle is faced, not merely to console after it's over. A believer facing compromise today can hold onto the promise of a new name and a hidden manna today, as fuel for continuing to overcome, not just as a distant reward.

REFLECTION

Which of these seven promises speaks most directly to the specific struggle you're currently facing?

How would holding onto that promise today, rather than only as a future reward, change how you face this week?

CHAPTER FOUR

Blessed Is the One Who Perseveres

“Blessed is the one who perseveres under trial because, having stood the test, that person will receive the crown of life that the Lord has promised to those who love him.”

JAMES 1:12

James connects perseverance directly to a crown, and it's worth noticing what kind of perseverance he means: not passive endurance, but active standing under real trial, the way a person stands under a weight rather than being crushed by it or fleeing from it. The crown isn't given for avoiding trial. It's given for standing inside it without abandoning love for God.

Trial as the test, not the punishment

James elsewhere is clear that trials produce something — perseverance itself is described as the product of testing, maturing a believer toward completeness. This reframes any current hardship, professional or personal, as potentially productive rather than merely endured. The goal is not simply to survive the trial, but to let it do the actual work of producing the perseverance the crown is promised to.

“Consider it pure joy, my brothers and sisters, whenever you face trials of many kinds, because you know that the testing of your faith produces perseverance. Let perseverance finish its work so that you may be mature and complete, not lacking anything.”

JAMES 1:2-4

The trial isn't an obstacle standing between you and the goal. Endured rightly, it is part of how the goal gets produced in you.

REFLECTION

What current trial in your life could be understood as producing perseverance, rather than simply as an obstacle to survive?

What would it look like to let this trial finish its work rather than trying to escape it prematurely?

CHAPTER FIVE

Overcoming the Accuser

“They triumphed over him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony; they did not love their lives so much as to shrink from death.”

REVELATION 12:11

This verse names the accuser directly and describes precisely how believers overcome him — not through superior willpower against accusation, but through two specific things: the blood of the Lamb, and the word of their testimony. Both are worth examining, because both correct a common mistake in how overcoming temptation and accusation are usually approached.

The blood of the Lamb: overcoming through what's already finished

The accuser's primary weapon is accusation — reminding a believer of past and present failure in a way designed to produce shame, isolation, and eventual surrender. The blood of the Lamb is not a technique for feeling better about that failure. It is the actual, objective basis on which the accusation no longer holds legal standing, regardless of how loud it sounds.

The word of their testimony: overcoming through honest witness

The second weapon is testimony — a believer's willingness to speak honestly about what God has actually done, including in the middle of failure and struggle. Accusation thrives in secrecy and silence. Testimony, spoken honestly rather than performed, directly undermines the accuser's primary strategy, because a truth spoken into the light is no longer available to be weaponized in the dark.

The accuser's power depends on secrecy. Testimony, spoken honestly, is how that power gets broken.

REFLECTION

What accusation from your past or present has the most power over you right now?

What would it look like to answer that accusation with the blood of the Lamb and an honest testimony, rather than silence or shame?

CHAPTER SIX

Thanks Be to God Who Gives the Victory

“But thanks be to God! He gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.”

1 CORINTHIANS 15:57

Paul writes this at the climax of his argument about resurrection, and the grammar is worth noticing: he gives us the victory, present tense, already happening, not a future reward waiting to be earned through sufficient spiritual performance. The victory over sin and death has already been given. What remains is to live increasingly aware of, and shaped by, a victory already accomplished.

Gratitude as the correct posture toward victory

Notice that Paul's response to this given victory is thanksgiving, not striving. This corrects a subtle but common distortion: treating the overcomer's life as an ongoing project of proving worthiness for a victory not yet secured. Paul's posture is the opposite — receiving with gratitude what has already been given, and living from that security rather than toward it.

Thanksgiving is the right response to a victory already given. Striving is the right response to one you still think you have to earn.

This closes the loop this whole book has been tracing: overcoming was never primarily about an artist's own resilience, willpower, or achievement. It is a birthright given to everyone born of God, secured through Christ, exercised through faith, tested through trial, defended against accusation through blood and testimony, and finally, simply, received with thanksgiving.

REFLECTION

Where has your posture toward overcoming quietly become striving rather than gratitude for what's already given?

What would change if you approached your next trial already thankful for a victory secured, rather than still trying to earn one?

CHAPTER SEVEN

Overcoming as an Artist

Every principle in this book takes on specific weight inside a music career, because the particular trials an artist faces are custom-shaped to test exactly the kind of overcoming Scripture describes.

Overcoming the world's measure of success

The world John describes overcoming is not merely a vague concept — for an artist, it includes a very specific, very persuasive scoreboard: streams, chart position, industry approval, comparison to other artists. Overcoming this world means genuinely not being governed by that scoreboard, trusting instead the security already secured in Christ, regardless of this week's numbers.

Overcoming the accuser's specific attacks on artists

Public work invites public accusation, both from others and from an artist's own mind — criticism of the work, comparison to more successful peers, memory of past failures resurfacing right before a release. The same weapons apply here as anywhere else: the blood of the Lamb answering the accusation's legal standing, and honest testimony breaking its hold over what's kept hidden.

Persevering through a career's actual trials

Slow seasons, disappointing releases, opportunities that go to someone else, the ordinary grind of an unglamorous career — these are the actual trials most artists face, far more often than dramatic public tests. James's promise applies here just as much as to more visible trials: perseverance through the slow, unglamorous seasons is exactly the kind of standing under trial the crown of life is promised to.

— Name the specific scoreboard currently tempting you to measure your worth by the world's terms rather than Christ's.

— Name a specific accusation, from others or from your own mind, that needs to be answered with testimony rather than silence.

— Name the slow, unglamorous trial you're currently being asked to persevere through, and thank God in advance for what it's producing.

REFLECTION

Which of these three — the world's scoreboard, the accuser's attacks, or the slow unglamorous trial — is currently the biggest test of your own overcoming?

What would it look like to face that test today already secure in a victory already given?

CLOSING WORD

Already Overcomers

The goal of the believer was never to eventually become an overcomer through enough effort, enough success, or enough spiritual performance. It was to recognize what has already been true since the moment of new birth — more than a conqueror, secured by a love the trouble was never strong enough to touch, holding promises given to specific churches in the middle of specific struggles, defended against every accusation by blood already shed and testimony honestly spoken.

Whatever trial is currently testing you — in your career, your calling, or your walk with God — the victory was not left for you to produce. It was already given. Thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Stand in that, and let perseverance finish its work.

INTEGRITY RECORDS

integrityrecords.org